Factoids for the week of June 16 - 20, 2014

Monday, June 16, 2014

Research from Bank of America's Sarbjit Nahal and Bejia Ma revealed that we are on the cusp of the largest generational transfer of wealth in history, according to the Business Insider. The first wave will involve an estimated $12 trillion or so flowing from the "Greatest Generation" to the baby boomer generation. The second wave is expected to be much larger, with U.S. boomers passing on close to $30 trillion in assets to their heirs over the next 30-40 years. Currently, only 4 in 10 retirees in the U.S. have a financial advisor.

The equity markets have been relatively calm of late. It has been over 40 trading days since the S&P 500 has experienced a single-day move of 1% or more (up or down), according to Bespoke Investment Group. The last time such a streak occurred was in 1995. There have been 31 streaks since 1928. Since 1944, the longest stretch without a 1% daily move was 173 trading days. Bespoke noted that there were three consecutive years in the 1960s that produced streaks of 100 trading days or more without a 1% daily move (1963, 1964 & 1965). For comparative purposes, there was a 50-day trading period in the midst of the "Financial Crisis" that produced an average daily move in excess of 4%.
